Aim and Scope: The Journal aims to promote optimum drug therapy in older adults by providing a regular programme of review articles covering the most important aspects of clinical pharmacology and disease management in this unique patient group. Physiological changes during aging which have implications for drug therapy also fall within the scope of the Journal. Specific topics within these broad subject areas will be presented as either comprehensive literature reviews which provide an assessment of the overall findings, shorter and more practically oriented review articles which are adequately supported by literature citations, brief leading articles which address emerging areas in an overview fashion, or articles discussing current opinion on controversial topics. Letters to the Editor are welcomed and will be considered for publication.
